

critical links: A professional inquiry process

5R.2

Response to initial finding sheet

Jot down ideas you wish to share with the presenter. Your verbal feedback will be helpful to the presenter in thinking about how to complete his/her inquiry, but written comments are even more helpful because they jog the memory long after the presentation and discussion are over.

1. In your own words describe what you think is the "heart" of this inquiry project.
2. What question do you think is at the core of this inquiry project?
3. Which collections of evidence or information directly answer or shed light on the question?
4. What evidence or information seems to be missing? Is there another collection of evidence that would provide information to address the question more directly?
5. What information or evidence from this study could you apply to your teaching situation?
6. What is the most useful aspect of this inquiry in terms of teaching and learning OR what would you do to shape it differently to make it even more useful if it was your inquiry study?
